Ki Tavo
Deuteronomy 26:1-29:8

Shabbat is a time of reflection and breathing in a hectic world with busy schedules. We like to think that our lives are more complicated and frantic than that of our ancestors from generations ago. We have added technology demands to our other responsibilities of life. We might want to remember that while our grandparents didn't have to worry about emails and texts and online demands, they did have more physical demands of life that we have been able to simplify with cars and electricity and communication tools. In any case, whether then or now, our lives are demanding. Now is a time to take a breath and a moment to relax. Enjoy Shabbat. – Rabbi Michael
